Farm Frenzy 3: Madagascar Game Review Farm Frenzy 3: Madagascar will make you feel like a farmer on a boat. It's a free game but it comes with a message of its limits. But all of that is part of the fun. Game Summary Farm Frenzy 3: Madagascar begins in 1939 and a series of events put you on the Madagascar Empire ship. You begin with about 28,000 credits. You'll be responsible for the food supplies for Madagascar. That food will be for the crew and the residents of the island. Your goal is to build a farm while moving the ship around. You'll be making money, food, and participating in a naval war with other players in the game. In order to use your ship, you'll have to earn "frenzy points." Frenzy points are a currency that can be earned in-game or downloaded for real money. You can also purchase the currency. The initial price is $0.99 but you can buy more when you earn enough in the game. Then, you can get the currency for about $0.89 for every 200,000 points. There is a short clip and an instructional video with the game. The most interesting part of the game is the way you build your farm. You'll need a fertilizer, a seed, and a greenhouse. As you build on land, you'll be able to get a crop and begin growing. Each crop is different and they grow differently. You'll be able to automate your farm based on the needs of your crops. You can buy these supplies in-game or with the currency. You'll have to balance the need for food with the competition. You'll need to think about supplies and the needs of the entire ship. This adds a bit of strategy to the game. You'll need to be nimble to get the money you need to advance the ship. You'll need to maneuver the ship into the right place. You'll need to purchase the right supplies in order to get ahead. You'll need to build a ship and buy supplies for this game. You'll be able to get that all from the store. However, you'll be able to purchase in-game currency with real money. You'll have to use that when you're building your farm. You'll be able to make a couple of crops. You can't just go into the store and buy everything you need. You'll have to do it yourself

Newsfeed Recent Money On The Street: Gold Reading Time: ~ 2minutes Date: 2/10/17 Gold Spikes...Market Overview...Part 3 Money On The Street: Gold I love watching the precious metals industry. No, I am not a gold bug. I understand the challenges that the gold price faces in finding acceptance and rising out of the rut that it is currently in. I also like this industry for it's consistency. From the lows of 1987 to the highs of 2007, gold has moved higher and higher. Today we sit near the highs of 2007 and have not made new highs since then. But what's the challenge to new highs? I see two reasons. First, because, the dollar is trading lower relative to other major currencies, ie. U.S. dollar index up -17% since end of 2010. While the gold price has moved to new all time highs, the gold price is trading at 16% of the dollar price. What does this mean? In short, everything that you would own in other currencies, you would own 1.6x in gold. That means if you owned just one ton of gold, you would be owning 16 tons of other currencies at today's prices. In a rising USD, gold is like a one way ticket to destination A "Gold Price for 2014" Second, we are in a low inflation environment. According to the Wholesale Price Index, the CPI averaged 2.2% for the last 10 years. The US consumer price index has averaged 0.4% year over year and is expected to average 1% for the year. In other words, when inflation is low, commodity prices, including gold, suffer from a lack of selling pressure. You can say that the open market is not flowing in the direction of the prices. The other side of this coin is that the price of gold has fallen to a level that is not sustainable. The price of gold is at the low of a secular bull. The price of gold has overstretched itself, and it is now time for a secular bear. I am not on any bearish side of the gold price. What I think is
