DownloadQ: React Native - is there a way to find out which function is being called? When using react-native, is there a way to figure out which function is being called? For example, is there a way to pass a function that is called when a button is pressed? I have a form that is being validated with Redux and I'm trying to learn how to do this more effectively but for now I just want to know how to call a function when a button is pressed in the form. A: I have figured it out. The reason I was struggling with this is because React Native isnt compiling the code unless it can call the function it is in or it is just not a function. 0005} ===== Not applicable.
