

There is a lower probability of this loss under the assumption of lognormality than under the assumption of normality. As we shall see shortly, this is the difference . In principle, if the distribution function is normal, then the probability of winning a million dollars with effort in a year should not exceed the probability of winning a million dollars if no effort is required. For this distribution function, there is a "for each action" probability function that returns the probability that the $\rho(t)$ th action will produce the $\rho(t_i)$ th kind of result.
