Q: Winforms Listview - Clear Selected rows I have a winform that has some Listviews that are grouped based on certain criteria. I have not bound these listviews, so the data is loaded into the Listviews based on the needs of the project. When the user clicks a button, I do the following: `MyListView.SelectedRows.Clear()`; After this if the user clicks on a different Listview, I do the following: `MyListView.SelectedRows.Clear()`; However, what happens is it resets the Listview to it's default settings. I don't want this to happen, I want the Listview to remember that it was selected rows cleared. I have a feeling that because the Listview is not bound, it is showing the data based off the form creation or some such. EDIT - I would like this behavior for that particular Listview, but to also happen for all other Listviews. This behavior is only happening for a Listview. A: I have found the answer. After combing through the winforms documentation, I found this: Note An unbound ListView control can retain its selection by default. This means the selection keeps state, but the ListView control retains the selection position. The first ListViewItem on the list is selected. If you clear a selection, the selection disappears and the control resets to the default selection. If you set SelectionMode to Multiple, it behaves like a DataGridView and retains the selection position, so that selecting an item automatically clears a selection anywhere else on the list. So I changed this: `MyListView.SelectedRows.Clear()`; to this: `MyListView.SelectionMode = SelectionMode.Multiple`; This is far superior. I just have a winform, and then have several ListViews in a group that are grouped based on certain criteria, and then once a certain item is picked, I clear that selection. If the selection is cleared on that particular ListView, the selection for all other ListViews are retained. Safety of low dose and high dose trimetrexate for moderate-to-severe plaque psoriasis. The estrogen receptor-alpha (ER-alpha) is expressed in both normal and malignant breast epithelial cells. The therapeutic goal of targeted chemoprevention strategies is to stop or at least slow the development of malignant breast cancers by selectively eradicating malignant cells while leaving normal breast tissue intact. In our laboratory, we have demonstrated that tamoxifen can selectively suppress the expression of the ER-alpha and its target genes in both ER-alpha-positive MCF-7 human breast cancer cells and mouse mammary tumor virus (MMTV)-induced mouse tumors by preventing the binding of the receptor to its target DNA sequences in the promoters of the genes. Our studies in the mouse model of chemical carcinogenesis indicated that tamoxifen treatment alone or in combination with multiple low dose N-nitrosomethylbenzylamine (MNBA) was able to prevent spontaneous mammary tumor development. However, treatment of mice with tamoxifen after the development of tumors reduced tumor size, suggesting that tamoxifen might be useful in halting or slowing the growth of established tumors. Our studies in the rat and mouse models of human breast cancer have shown that tumors which overexpress the ER-alpha are more sensitive to tamoxifen treatment than those with low ER-alpha expression. This difference in tamoxifen response was associated with a higher incidence of apoptosis and a significantly lower incidence of mitotic arrest, G2 cell cycle checkpoint bypass and angiogenesis in mammary tumors overexpressing the ER-alpha. Breast tumors from patients with ER-alpha-positive tumors also had significantly lower incidence of mitotic arrest than those with ER-alpha-negative tumors. Whether this reflects the biology of breast cancer in women or is just a reflection of selection bias because of the fact that only women are eligible for the clinical trials is not yet clear. In addition, our studies have shown that similar to the antiestrogen RU 486, tamoxifen can prevent the development of mammary tumors in nude mice transplanted with human ER-alpha-positive MCF-7 cells. In the current proposal, we plan to further characterize and characterize the effect of tamoxifen on breast cancer growth and progression by conducting clinical trials in women with early stage (stage 0 or I) breast cancer. We propose to conduct two separate clinical trials in women with early stage breast cancer. The first will be a pilot study for tamoxifen treatment of women with ER-alpha-positive or -negative
