In an effort to better understand the biochemical or physiological mechanisms which underlie the unique symptom of nausea associated with the use of methyl-hexanamine, a series of studies were undertaken. This study examined the possibility that alkylcyclohexanolamide (ACC) may be involved in the pathogenesis of methyl-hexanamine-induced panic. As part of these studies, a series of experiments were carried out to determine whether ACC may be a more potent emetic than other cyclohexanolamides. Initially, four derivatives of ACC were synthesized and tested for emetic potency: cyclohexanolamide (CHOL), 1-methylcyclohexanolamide (MCHOL), 4-methylcyclohexanolamide (4MCHOL) and 1-ethylcyclohexanolamide (ECHOL). ECHOL was found to be more potent than the others, with a molar ED50 of 38.5 mg/kg. The prior treatment of animals with the hydrochloride salt of HgCl2.
