The Court Clinic offers three main services: mediation, advisory consultations and, finally, priority consultations. In many cases, the parties begin with mediation. Mediation is an informal meeting or contact between a judge and one of the parties. This service is not paid, but may be important to the parties. The judge, who does not want to intervene in the conflict, can tell the parties that they must resolve the issue among themselves, after which the application for a trial in another place will be considered. If the parties agree to this, they can request that the matter be heard elsewhere and that they be present at this meeting.
