When Islamic State supporters posted a gruesome photo of a drowned Syrian toddler, they were broadcasting a message of solidarity with terror groups including Jabhat al-Nusra, a militant group, says the head of the civil defense rescue team in the beleaguered Syrian city of Aleppo. Faqir Abu Shneik, 49, made the explosive claim in an interview with the Associated Press, saying that IS supporters who shared the photo on Twitter and other social media channels would have understood that they were "loyal to Daesh." As the image shows, Syrian toddler Omran Daqneesh lies dead in a pool of water after he was reportedly injured while in the city of Aleppo, Syria, October 21, 2016. Daesh - an Arabic acronym for Islamic State - is a militant group which has seized swathes of territory in Iraq and Syria. It is notorious for its extreme interpretation of Islam, and has committed a string of atrocities including mass executions. The claim by the man who distributed the photo comes as fears grow that IS supporters will exploit humanitarian crises to carry out attacks on civilians. #ISIS supporters posted the photos of this m2k16 toddler. On Monday, the United Nations called for an investigation into the deaths, which caused an outpouring of anger among Syrian rescue workers and human rights activists. READ MORE: Aleppo - Syrians defy terrorists and make 'last stand' The UN passed a resolution calling for an investigation into the incidents in Syria. This will be the fifth report to examine crimes carried out by the government, the Syrian opposition, and the Islamic State, Reuters reported. "We have evidence of incontrovertible mass graves of more than 4,000 people," said Marianne Gasser, director of the UN's Commission of Inquiry. "Russia has no mandate to engage in these crimes and the state of siege has already made it impossible for the UN to investigate these crimes." Friday will mark three years since Russia started its air campaign in support of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad.

Q: How to convert the numbers of a string to an actual number in JavaScript I'm working on a small game and the player can pick a number from the keyboard. I have numbers like the number "1" and the number "12". How do I convert them to real numbers? For example: "1" and "12" should be "1" and "12". I tried it with `parseInt()`; but that fails to work. Thanks in advance! A: Try this: `var num = '1'; num = parseInt(num, 10); // num == 1;` Explanation / gives the regular expression pattern for parsing a string (1st part). `Number:` Matches numbers in the form: `digits digits .` // gives a regular expression for returning a regex pattern when matched `num.match(/^([0-9]+$/);` It should be noted that this only checks the first number, and stops on the second. Notes: the only "junk" char allowed in a regex is a literal " (escaped with a backslash) ^ anchors the regex to the start of the string, not the whole string. $ anchors the regex to the end of the string. (10) means that this is 10 digits long. In a list of digits, this means that only the first 10 are accepted. Q: What is the fastest way to find the next unsequenced mutation in a bunch of DNA sequences? I have a group of 200,000 DNA sequences in FASTA format in a database. I'm looking for the next mutation event in each of these sequences. We were already using BLAT but it doesn't handle this kind of problem well. We have about 10 million reads per sample, so we don't want a solution that has a lot of memory or CPU time. It would be nice to be able to go back and look at past experiments, so we'd need a small file size. We also need to find the approximate location of the mutation. A: You could use BLAT to find the pattern, then in the context of the pattern that you found use one of the Burrows-Wheeler Aligners to create a BWAK file from the sequences you want to
