And this one might just make you go hmmm. When I spotted this on the Merc's website, I instantly got a bit excited. But for some reason, I couldn't for the life of me find a pic of the item on the website – so I thought, why not make this one? Hmmm, what a great way to show off the new Merc WRX. Advertisement At first glance you'll notice the key differences between this car and the original. First off, the new Wrx is based on the Subaru Impreza and is a bit more upscale. And while it's quite similar to the earlier model, the Subaru has been freshened up as well, adding touches like the red diffuser. The body panels are also different, but I think that they're nice, sort of fit for the purpose. But the most apparent difference is the new styling. A part of the subtle but attractive new exterior is the standard LED headlights. Another is the new fender shape and bodywork, which does make the car look a bit larger than the old one. Also, the front and rear wings are modified for aerodynamics. And while the overall shape is similar, the grille is wider and the headlights are narrower. Under the bonnet, there are two options for the new Impreza – the more traditional four cylinder 2.0 liter unit and the turbocharged WRX STI-esque 2.0 liter unit. Each produces 290 horsepower and 270 ft lbs of torque – so the four will rev to 7,500 rpm and the turbo reaches 6,600 rpm. The interior is basically the same as the original, so it's a bit easier to see the differences between them. The new model comes with a nice-looking and totally functional new dash, improved seats and door panels, as well as a few other odds and ends. There's also more storage in the doors – including an ashtray in the door. 5b5f913d15

But for one teen, her experience was even more heartbreaking because she didn't know how she was going to pay for the new device she desperately needed. Shelley Schenker, 16, of the town of Orland Park, Illinois, was born with a hole in her heart called a ventricular septal defect. To keep the hole open, she requires daily medication to keep her pressure in check, and she's also had two major operations to try to keep her alive. While Schenker has been receiving the medication since she was born, her family did not have insurance. It's because of this that she was unable to get the surgery she needed to keep her alive. It was about two years ago, that she had enough of the pain and suffering and took it upon herself to fundraise for the surgery she needed. It was at this time she started using social media and online fundraising tools to raise money for her surgery. It's a way that she could find ways to make the most out of her situation and not worry about cost. During this time, her heart was not doing well and was closing up on her. By the time she had the surgery, there was no more room for her heart to work and she had a 100% chance of dying. Schenker had a lung transplant, but her body rejected it and the graft did not work. She was put in a medically induced coma for a month, after which time she woke up and made a complete recovery. "I was the last of four children born in 2014 with my sister having a sister born before me and my brother having a brother born before him," Schenker said, according to the Huffington Post. "There was always

Plus: Telco giant Vodafone Group of New Zealand is to sell its 49 percent stake in New Zealand's second largest broadband provider, 2degrees. Vodafone will sell the stake, including its share in 2degrees' Internet service provider 2degrees Media, to 2degrees' management and will provide for the sale of its other shares in the provider. The company said it was seeking expressions of interest from potential buyers before setting a deadline of 28 March for expressions of interest. 2degrees has about half of the New Zealand market for residential broadband and 90 percent of the market for small businesses. Vodafone CEO Mike Dunphy said in a statement the sale of the stake will give the company greater financial flexibility and enhance Vodafone's focus on its remaining business. 2degrees Media has other shareholders, including UTV Digital, which owns a 19.5 percent stake, and a partnership between Microsoft, Intel and New Zealand carrier 2degrees. "We remain committed to growing our broadband businesses, which are complementary to our core telecommunications operations. We are therefore pleased to have reached a good deal with 2degrees, which will enable us to unlock further value and make significant progress in building a more competitive broadband offering for New Zealand. ♦
