This is a list of file formats used by computers, sorted by type. The filename extension is usually enclosed in parentheses if it is different from the ....jpg file and is not the extension of the parenthesized filename. Each of these file types has specific content, but the content of different file formats may differ depending on how the file was written to the disc. An extension can be thought of as a file identifier indicating the type of file. Files of the same format usually have the same extension value. Let's take a look at some common file types. Text: .txt, .csv, .dbf, .xls. Microsoft Office documents: .
