I have a list of points in an array with an ordering. For a given distance x, how can I find the points that are within x of each point? In this case, the points are all points from a particular time, so the ordering does not matter.
new Order { Time = 0, X = 10, Y = -10 }, new Order { Time = 2, X = 0, Y = 0 }, new Order

I have a table that has about 2 million rows in it. I need to search a field in this table. When I write this line: select count() from table where field=value; it takes me about two minutes. How can I reduce the time? I'm using SQL Server. Thanks A: The issues here are: you have a 2M rows in the table and are retrieving the count with a WHERE clause You are retrieving all 2M rows and counting only ones that match the WHERE clause You are interested in a field on each row, not a specific field on each row So a quicker query will be more complex because it will include a number of sub-queries, rather than a simple count. One way to do it is: select count() from (select * from mytable where field = value) t Which will have the same performance as your original statement. Another way to do it is to use a subquery, but stop this from getting 'too complex', by using a simple select statement: SELECT (select count(*) from mytable where field = value) Each of those takes about 500ms to execute and each will run about 20x faster. The reason for this is you are not always counting every row in the original table. You are simply counting the rows that match the WHERE clause.
