The Heritage Lottery Fund's £63m (£75m) announcement comes a year after Unesco, the UN's cultural body, recognised the BBC's Titanic film as world heritage. Unesco said the grant would assist the BBC in preserving the archives. The grant also covers the museums of France, Germany, Denmark, the Netherlands and Italy. Museum supporters in each country will receive a grant for their "listed archives and heritage management services". Image caption Volunteers prepare an exhibit of the Titanic's bell in Belfast Among the exhibitions to benefit are the "Sunken City" exhibition at the Titanic port of Liverpool in Merseyside; the largest collection of Nelson's naval gold in Portsmouth; and a collection of some 200,000 books at the Royal Society of Literature in London. The programmes will be delivered by local museums, heritage organisations and cultural bodies. They will enable the most vulnerable archives to be kept open, along with the preservation of heritage in times of crisis and make sure a cultural emergency plan is available to institutions and museums
