We show that the capacity of visual short-term memory (vSTM) can depend on the features that have to be maintained. Specifically, we investigate whether interference from distractor items affects the development of vSTM for nonisolated objects when the distractors bear no resemblance to the targets. In Experiment 1, participants were asked to judge the orientation of a circular target. The results revealed two distinct phases in the development of vSTM capacity: before 50% of the memorized items were presented, performance was below chance, but after this threshold was reached, accuracy increased more steeply with the number of items, as compared to a control condition, which did not show a similar saturation. Experiment 2 was similar to Experiment 1 except that distractors were added to the displays. The results showed that when distractors were orthogonal to the orientation of the targets, performance was unaffected. However, when distractors were identical to the target, performance was significantly impaired. This suggests that vSTM is guided by the task-specific features of the stimulus array and that vSTM is modulated by the processing capacity of the distractor items. In Experiment 3, we manipulated the number of distractors relative to 0cc13bf012

The rete mirabile of the lateral cerebral ventricles of the ground squirrel Citellus dusky contains axons, which branch out into the ambient fluid (ASF) and into the pial capillaries, and dendrites and neuroglial cells. Axons and dendrites form terminal and interdigitating contacts. Additionally, glial cells and ASF are in contact with dendrites of axons. Glial cells have a delicate cytoplasm, processes and an abundant network of cell extensions. The cell extensions contain parallel arrays of microtubules arranged in pairs and in bundles. The microtubules are hollowed by invaginations of

Carcinoma of the choroid plexus of the lateral ventricle is a rare neoplasm with varied clinical presentation, characterized by the progressive onset of hydrocephalus resulting from an intracerebral tumour reaching the structures of the basal cisterns and the ependyma of the lateral ventricles. We describe a case of the tumour located in the lateral ventricle which invaded the olfactory groove and perforated into the sella turcica, where it caused a slight clinical alteration in the patient and created a cerebrospinal fluid leak into the nasal cavity, which was controlled by means of a lumbar CSF drainage. The patient remained asymptomatic and was kept on observation till the death of the patient. The case is reviewed with emphasis on diagnostic methods and on the treatment employed.

NORFOLK, Va. — Norfolk is a city at heart and soul. Here, the local waterfowl population (ducks, geese, and swans) support commercial and sportfishing and others use the area to enjoy a variety of boating sports. Norfolk's working waterfront and oyster fishery further contribute to the city's economic vitality. For this year's American Heart Association's Go Red for Women gala, held on Oct. 13 at AAFES Point, the city of Norfolk embraced the red theme for the evening by highlighting its health education and heart health initiatives. "Heart disease is the number one killer of women, and at the American Heart Association's Go Red for Women Gala, we'll be raising awareness of the dangers of blood clots as they can result in a heart attack," Mayor Paul Fraim said. "Following the presentation, the Heart Association will be awarding the Go Red for Women Award to the city of Norfolk to recognize its work in addressing these issues." The city, with the support of Mayor Fraim, established a strategic planning committee, which included representatives from the business, government, education, and health sectors, to analyze the city's past, present, and
