Nevertheless, in our study, decreased LOS was not associated with increased mortality. This finding is in accordance with a recent study, which found that in critically ill patients, increased or decreased LOS were not associated with worse outcome.42{ref-type="ref"} Our study is limited by its observational design, for which patients who were recruited for the longitudinal postoperative study were included. It is well known that the management of cardiac surgery patients is not standardized,43{ref-type="ref"}, 44{ref-type="ref"} To create the independent cohorts, we excluded patients for whom CPB data were incomplete or missing (n=60), which might have led to a selection bias. Moreover, it is well known that the choice of cardioplegic solution is in part responsible for the difference in outcome of patients. In our study, the majority of patients received cold potassium-based blood cardioplegia, whereas St. Thomas' Hospital is the only center in the United Kingdom using a warm blood cardioplegia.45{ref-type="ref"}, [46](#jah32133
