“HyperMotion Technology has added life and emotion to the authenticity of our gameplay,” said Jake Cardona, Senior Executive Producer of the FIFA franchise. “We have taken an innovative approach to designing and implementing this technology, leveraging our player data for greater playability and greater audience engagement. We’re pleased to be able to introduce this exciting new technology and look forward to seeing how the community embraces it.” The addition of Vela (speed and acceleration are increased) and aerial Duels (more movement in mid-air, increased scores) have been tweaked to feel more natural and feel more contextual, especially in advanced play. The key new gameplay elements are: “Natural Player Movement” – Player motion is now more reflective of how a player is actually moving in real-life, using motion capture collected from actual football players. “Intuitive Controls” – Player controls are designed to react instantly to player movement, with custom inputs for the ball. “All-new Movement” – Off the ball, players can now run with the ball, making dribbling more dynamic and rewarding for defenders. “Physics Matters” – Players are harder to control as they try to dribble. The Sensitivity attribute for controlling players with the ball is increased from 1.0 to 1.2. “Player Impact” – Players now react more accurately to opponent actions to accurately simulate player collisions and passes. “All-new Attacking System” – Confidence and Defending Abilities are increased to help offensive players create more opportunities. “All-new Goalkeeper System” – Goalkeepers have multiple new techniques. “This is an exciting new way for us to tell a story in a new and unique way,” said Marcus Sorensen, FIFA Lead Producer. “With ‘HyperMotion Technology’, we’re able to bring an authentic simulation to life with more complex and unpredictable game scenarios. As game designers, we have an opportunity to not only create world-class gameplay, but also tell a story through that gameplay.” Fifa 22 Activation Code will feature improved graphics, new animations, player detail and match-day atmosphere and atmosphere effects, all powered by Frostbite.
