To find out how FIFA 22 adapts on-field gameplay to the emerging soccer styles of the modern era, dive into EA SPORTS' newly redesigned surface intelligence - which explains why the pitch has some different feel and doesn't feel like the same size. Then check out the shape of the ball, and how these changes affect the physics. Learn more about some of the best players who improve their ball skills and understanding of where the ball goes. And let the the in-game camera show you some of the real world training environments in which FIFA 22 really comes to life. The following pages describe FIFA 22's new features, innovations and tweaks. More topics are added as we progress through the month so check back to see what's new. Today we'll take a look at how the pitch has been redesigned. The New Pitch The Pitch in FIFA 22's Normal Mode is slightly larger than in FIFA 21. It offers players a different feel and look, but retains the same goalkeeping and offside positions. Many of the pitch dimensions have changed, with the distance from the touchlines increasing from 1,500 to 1,725 metres. While a similar sized pitch would be more challenging in FIFA 21, the increased top speed of the ball in FIFA 22 makes for faster, flowing gameplay. Goalkeepers no longer dive as much as they did in FIFA 21. They can choose to react to the ball in a more controlled manner, but they are no longer able to dive completely out of control to get a touch on the ball. This makes them more intelligent, considering their angle when reacting to the ball, which should make them a more effective defender. Midfielders now use new body motion skills to intelligently dribble through opposition players. When dribbling they can move into space and evade a tackle or use the spin to evade a defender and create a chance to shoot. While players can no longer be "killed" when offside, a new Offside Alert feature keeps defenders aware of offside plays. This might not be as important in open play, but it is a great tool when defending a goal. FIFA 22's pitch has been redesigned to make the game more aggressive. FIFA 22's pitch has been redesigned to make the game more aggressive, with short passes no longer allowing for a certain strategy. Short passes
