However, it is known that the PET film and the PC film are remarkably poor in heat bondability to each other. Accordingly, when the PET film and the PC film are superposed at a low temperature, it is necessary to bring the films into close contact with each other at an increased temperature. When a polyester copolymer is used, the film has low heat sealability and fusion strength. Furthermore, when such a polyester copolymer is used in a film superposed with another polyester film at a temperature not exceeding 150.degree. C., it is necessary to increase the thickness of the film due to a low heat sealability. This leads to an increase in cost, which is not desirable. The present invention is intended to overcome the above described problems of the prior art. An object of the invention is to provide a superposed polyester film excellent in heat sealability, fusion strength and optical transparency and to provide an object with a good appearance excellent in transparency and gloss by bonding these films to each other.106 F.3d 401 U.S.v.Michel* NO. 96-1098

A method for the determination of sodium in meat was developed, which was based on ion-exchange chromatography with post-column photometric detection. The key was to add 8.5 mmol I(-1) EDTA to the sample. Beef, lamb, pork, horse and chicken samples were treated with 0.2% papain, and then sodium in meat was detected by ion chromatography with conductivity detection. The detection limit was 10 mg kg(-1) in meat samples. The recoveries of Na in the meat samples were approximately 80% of the added level when the concentration was higher than the detection limit.Drug delivery systems have the potential to provide significant improvements in the delivery and management of pharmaceuticals. For example, improvements in bioavailability can expand the therapeutic index and provide better patient compliance. The most common of the drug delivery system routes are oral, topical, and parenteral (e.g., subcutaneous injection). These routes typically involve either administering the therapeutic agent in liquid form and allowing the therapeutic agent to reach the systemic circulation by passing through the walls of the gastrointestinal tract and entering the systemic circulation, or for a topical drug delivery system the therapeutic agent is administered in a solid form and the vehicle with the therapeutic agent dispersed or dissolved therein is applied to the local site of action. A number of topical drug delivery systems are known. For example, transdermal patches or iontophoresis can be used to deliver drugs into the systemic circulation from a transdermal or a topical site of application. Examples of transdermal patches include U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,559,222; 4,431,636; 4,573,996; and 4,640,913. Examples of topical transdermal delivery systems include U.S. Pat. For example: ssh the_host "rm -rf ~/.$USER" i want to execute the command using ssh, without having to open a terminal and do it manually. How can I do it? A: First of all, keep in mind that the ~/.$USER directory is hidden and normally not visible to SSH. So to do this, the easiest way is to ssh in and rm this directory. You can execute commands by piping them through a program, like so: ssh user@host -p port 'foo | bar' If you want this to happen automatically, you would need to put this in your ~/.ssh/config: Host host User user Port port Then when you type "ssh host", the command foo | bar will be run on the remote host. A: You could always write a little shell
