Abstract/Summary A theory of harmonic generation in dense matter is applied to condensed matter systems. First, an analysis is made of the possible forms of the interaction between the photon and electron. A strong distortion of the atomic potential is shown to arise as a result of interactions with electric oscillations. Then, the amplitudes of these oscillations are calculated in the plasma, and the possibility of generating harmonic radiation is discussed. Good agreement is found with results from numerical integration over the distribution of potentials and energies

The object of the game is to take more money from your partner than him/her. Use one of the available options such as money or a diversion to ruin his/her day. You only have a time limit of 3 min, but you can change your item at any time.Q: ¿Por qué La encíclica "Merenti in Baptisiam" de Francisco sobre los bautistas no es comúnmente llamada "La encíclica de San Francisco"? En el abecedario de latín, los diarios se llaman encíclicas y se las pone como ejemplo de ellas un texto importante, pero se dice "La encíclica de Santo Tomás (de Aquino)" y no "la encíclica de San Tomás". La razón parece bien justa: la epístola "Santo Tomás" en la cual se basa "La encíclica de Santo Tomás" se escribe por un santo y por el libro de sus obras. Esto ha sido motivo para decir que se llame "La encíclica de San Tomás". Sin embargo, la encíclica "Merenti in Baptisiam" de Francisco sí se escribe según el abecedario con "La encíclica de San Francisco de Asís", porque se escribe por un santo y por un libro. ¿Esto se debe a alguna traducción errónea del latín, o por alguna razón que sea justa, o es algo más? A: En el sistema de uso de la prensa traduciría simplemente con "la encíclica de San Francisco". Se trata de una utilización común que tampoco se menciona en ningún diccionario de la RAE. Esto da la impresión de ser algo válido, sin embargo tuve que apuntar que no existe en algún diccionario, incluso el MIGLIOR, el Enciclopedia Universal Ilustrada de Rabalievski d41b202975
