Q: How to resolve Exiting function due to syntax error? I have a method that creates a new instance of a class, and I am trying to use an extension method in that class. I am getting the error: "Exiting function due to syntax error" Now, I am not entirely sure what I am doing wrong. Here is my extension method (myExtension.cs): /// /// Provide access to Adobe Flash Player functionality for html5 apps. /// /// /// A reference to the active instance. /// public static FlashPlayerInstance GetActiveInstance() { FlashPlayerInstance activeInstance = null; ActiveInstanceType type = ActiveInstanceType.None; foreach (IWebBrowser _WebBrowser in WebBrowser.GetBrowsers()) { if (_WebBrowser.ActiveInstanceType == ActiveInstanceType.Unknown) _WebBrowser.GetActiveInstance(); else if (_WebBrowser.ActiveInstanceType == ActiveInstanceType.Active) { activeInstance = _WebBrowser.GetActiveInstance(); if (activeInstance!= null) type = _WebBrowser.ActiveInstanceType; } } return activeInstance; } Here is a class that should work, if I am reading the error correctly: /// /// Provides access to Adobe Flash Player functionality. /// public sealed class FlashPlayerInstance { public FlashPlayerInstance() { } public string Error { get; internal set; } public ActiveInstanceType ActiveInstanceType { get; set; } public bool HasActiveInstance => ActiveInstanceType!= ActiveInstanceType.None; public static ActiveInstanceType GetActiveInstanceType()

The TUNEL method as a predictor of in vitro developmental competence of oocytes in pig. A total of 300 pig oocytes (Mao-xiang breed) were collected from ovaries of slaughtered female pigs and treated with one of the three modifications of the TUNEL (terminal deoxynucleotidyl transferase dUTP nick-end labeling) method, developed by Salamano et al. [8] to induce DNA breaks in oocytes. The oocytes were fixed with 1% buffered formaldehyde, and two days later, some were cultured in a medium containing phosphorylcholine for the synthesis of polar lipids. A total of 128 samples of pig oocytes derived from 6 mature females were studied. There were no differences between the three modifications of the TUNEL method in their capacity to predict which oocytes will be fertilized in vitro. Oocytes with fragmented DNA were more likely to have matured in vivo, and in vitro, than did those with non-fragmented DNA. The oocytes with fragmented DNA were also more likely to be fertilized than those with non-fragmented DNA.36K Shares Share Tweet Share Share Email *UPDATE 12/17/19 12:03 p.m. EST - The NHL is investigating the use of an unknown substance thrown during Saturday's game between the Calgary Flames and the St. Louis Blues.
