Stress Stress is something we all experience at some point in our lives. Under stress we feel worry, fear and anger. We also exhibit other signs of stress when we are under stress like overeating, needing to sleep more, etc. The physiological effects of stress are so distinct and treatable, that stress should not be tolerated. It should not be approached with a "woe is me, that is just how life is, so I can't do anything about it" attitude or something that is v. negative. If you want to improve your health, then acknowledging the stress in your life is the first step.

Common Stressors Sickness and Infection Mental Fatigue Exhaustion Overworking Social and Emotional Issues Relationship Issues Social/Political Issues Financial Issues

On a scale of 1-10, I would rate my stress level as a 4. When I become too stressed I become short tempered, grumpy, tired and/or irritable. I am more likely to get sick when I am stressed. I tend to eat more, drink less and experience more snacking. I take longer to fall asleep, wake up sooner and stay asleep for shorter periods. The solution? Pause. When I feel stress coming on, I stop what I am doing and calmly take a breather. I remind myself that I am only human and have a limit to what I am able to accomplish, just as everyone else does. When I have a goal to accomplish, I take two short breaks about every 2 hours. When I feel stressed during the day, I listen to calming, relaxing music, I take a deep breath and consciously do a body scan to calm myself. I take breaks when I remember I need to. A lot of people walk around thinking that they need to work constantly, that they are going to get it all done, that no matter what they need to get the work done. That is not true. By walking away from work, I am able to rest and renew my energy, I am able to take time to do the things that I need to do. My results have been amazing and any time
