For example, if I were to state "I'm going on holiday today." would I say "Je vais passer samedi" or "Je vais passer samedi". I'm only asking this because there is a regional difference between my home country and France. If it matters, I live in Quebec. A: The verb "passer" has only three different forms. As for the other verb(s), you can see that in French, there is no difference between "va passer" and "va passe". So there are no different forms for different tenses, so just the subject. Je vais pas samedi. = I'm going no Sunday. Je vais passe samedi. = I'm passing Sunday. In your question you also said that you have a regional difference between France and your home country. That's quite confusing. You are from Québec? In which region? There are for now only two official regions in Québec: Québec (QC, QC: Quebec) and the rest of Canada (ROC). Then the Francophonie/French language authorities have some other regions, called official or unofficially ones: Québec region = QC and ROC andatlas.ca has Québec, Provinces & Territories, Quebec and Atlantic Provinces Q: How does the C data type compare to type data? Lets say I have a customer, I have an Employee and a Request. Let's say I want to do something like this in C: //
