Suppose that a conditional distribution, given a specific value of the explanatory variable, depends on the value of some other explanatory variable. Find an expression for the uncertainty in the conditional distribution that ignores the particular value of the explanatory variable. To solve this task, I think it's important to understand the semantics of the expressions you're given. For instance, $\frac{1}{2}(.5+.5)$ is not the covariance of the given data. It is the covariance of the two given variables on the value $X=0.5$ (and, perhaps, some other value). So, it is perfectly reasonable to imagine that $\text{cov}(X,Y)=0.6$. However, the expression $P(Y=1|X=0.5)$ might actually be ill-defined for the following reason. Suppose that $\text{Var}(Y)=\sigma^2$. Then we can write: $P(Y=1|X=0.5)=\frac{1}{2}\left[P(Y=1|X=0.5,Y=1)+P(Y=1|X=0.5,Y=0)\right]=\frac{1}{2}(\sigma^2+0)=\frac{\sigma^2}{2}$ and that's what we're asked for, but the way we got there is by simply defining: $P(Y=1|X=0.5)=\frac{\sigma^2}{2}$ Remember that σ^2 is the variance of the variable Y . Unfortunately, it is not the case that $\text{Var}(Y|X=0.5) = \sigma^2$. 0cc13bf012

He was running from his addiction to a prescription pill addiction. Kratom helped him kick both. He learned everything he could about Kratom in 2 months, and finally felt like he had a fighting chance at living a normal life. After all he knew Kratom was legal in most states, he could get it without a prescription, and he could get it without getting arrested. After 2 years, Jay went back to Kratom just to prove to himself it wasn't helping him. To his surprise he felt even better than when he started. He had started to thrive, he was working, he had money in his pocket, and best of all he wasn't using anything else for his mood or cravings. It really felt like he finally had control over his life. Most people still aren't aware of the fact that Kratom has been around since at least the 1960's. It was originally developed to be a sedative and used in anesthesia, it was also used for pain relief. When Kratom was outlawed, it was actually named Methadone by the DEA because the active compound was a similar compound, but it was being used as a partial opiate replacement. Now that we have this history, let's talk about it. When choosing your kratom strain, you need to look at how it looks, feels, tastes, and smells. But most importantly you need to look at how your body reacts. Do you feel sleepy, do you have more energy, do you have more focus, do you have more clarity of mind, are you agitated, are you relaxed?
