Everything works fine, except for when the input parameter is a long string (i.e. "some text " instead of "some text"). It works fine if it's just a line. However, it makes the first line of the file have "some text " at the end. The function is:

```
int
addToLog(char* format,...) { FILE* logFile;
char logName[30]; char textBuffer[30];
char logDir[30]; int logLength = 0; strcpy(logName, logDir); strcat(logName,
".log"); if (fopen_s(&logFile, logName,
"a")!= 0) { printf("Can't open log file '%s'", logName); return(-1); } printf(" ===== "); va_list args;
va_start(args, format); logLength =
vsnprintf(textBuffer, sizeof(textBuffer), format, args); fprintf(logFile, "%s", textBuffer); va_end(args);

---

printf("logLength: %d ", logLength); fclose(logFile); return 0; } I should add that I am using VS2017 and the code is written in C99 mode. A: logLength = vsnprintf(textBuffer, sizeof(textBuffer), format, args); should be logLength = vsnprintf(textBuffer, sizeof(textBuffer),
format
