In which situation you see a largest number of men in an elevator, if it is a 10th floor or 11th floor or 13th floor. Do you think that it is possible to see 50% of male citizens in an elevator? A: According to a survey conducted by KPMG for the GSMA, the global average numbers of male and female passengers on public transport was 53% male to 47% female (6.7 billion men to 2.7 billion women). The survey of 100 commuters in 100 cities (source), conducted with the help of Ipsos (Italy), shows that in larger cities (above 500,000 inhabitants) the proportion of men is higher (65%) than in smaller ones (35%), and that there is no gender difference in transportation activities on daily basis (64% men and 36% women) but that women are more likely to travel with children. In the case of a 10th floor, we have 13 men to 10 women, which would be close to 50% male to 50% female, but due to the fact that 50% of men would be 6.7 billion and the same number for women would be 2.7 billion, if both numbers are the same and the percentages don't change, then the answer would be:  $(6.7/2.7)/(6.7/2.7) = 40.6\%$  And in the case of an 11th floor, the percentages are 10% (1.3/0.9) and 10% (0.97/0.93), respectively, which gives us: (1.3/0
