FIFA is a football management simulation video game series by Electronic Arts. The series was created by Mike VanDamme, Simon Hailwood, and Mike Edmondson, and is developed by EA Canada on the EA Sports label. The FIFA series was originally launched in September of 1991, and has been continuously developed since, up to and including FIFA 14, released in September 2013. The franchise is published by Electronic Arts. Gameplay FIFA simulates both the physical and mental aspects of management and gameplay, allowing the player to progress through matches, control their own team and teams of players, and compete with friends and other online users. As a manager, a player will control the tactical set-up of their team by interacting with the field of play. The player has various options to use during the match, including fielding a squad of six players and a goalkeeper; playing in an offensive or defensive tactic; setting players into formations; and substituting players in and out of the game. With the tactical options of a manager and the physical action of a player all on one screen, FIFA creates a beautiful and easy to use game that never for a second feels like you are in a console football game. Points system The game is played using a point system, which is acquired by the team, based on results. Each match may result in victory or defeat, with a match resulting in a win worth two points, a tie worth one point each, and a loss worth zero points. Points are gained by scoring an equal or more number of goals than the opponent. A point may also be gained by scoring an equal or more number of goals from the penalty kick. The team with the most points at the end of the season is declared the winner. Setting The player's first decision will be to choose whether their team plays in a competitive match, or in the pre-match warm-up period. The game features nine different competitive match styles to choose from, from the more traditional 5-a-side in the pre-match warm-up to modified 3v3 exhibition matches on the FIFA Ultimate Team. The warm-up period, also known as team-specific training, is the player's only opportunity to make changes to his team. During the warm-up, players can train their players, substitute them and change their team formation. Pressing the R3 button is used to start the warm-up period, which can be
