Thank you for your attention.Abortion is no laughing matter I was on Facebook, surfing for pictures of cute babies, and I came across a funny video that caused me to jump out of my seat with laughter: a woman named Amy McCready, on a Comedy Central show, is talking about abortion. A lot of her words contained gross language, but I could still understand everything she said. She's laughing and giggling and pointing her fingers at her head when she says things like, "It's almost like snapping your fingers and having your head move for the first time in a long time." This woman knows what she's talking about: she's had two abortions. My husband has this theory that it's much less emotionally taxing to have a miscarriage, and that's because what's left is the tissue. If you can't physically feel a baby move around in the uterus (which no one can, because it isn't even there), it has less weight. So, having a miscarriage is like someone just putting tissue into the trash. There's no emotion attached to it, so the hard part, the painful part, is over with. I think he's absolutely right. People often talk about abortion like it's just like having a baby. It's not. Saying that abortion is just like pregnancy makes it sound like it's a natural process. It's not. She may feel like she knows what's happening to her body, because she's seen

(If you have a crack or serial for this game, please send to us by contact us)Archives Categories Ayrshire Pictures Our Stuart Family used to live on the Isle of Bute during a holiday in the early 90's and their kids went to school in Kilmarnock so it was an easy decision for them to choose Ayrshire for us to retire to. I thought it would be nice to share some of the things we loved to do while we were there, at least we hope you will think so. Our favourite place to have a coffee was at The Goatshed Cafe where we would sit under the eaves with a glass of wine, watching the world go by as we so enjoyed the peace and the sun filtering through the trees. We were lucky to visit Doon Village which is part of the Fyne Heritage World Heritage Site, it is a beautiful spot with some great buildings and I am sure there are photos of us that will match up to this area, so if you are looking for something to do when you come to Ayrshire and to Scotland I highly recommend it. We also loved visiting the waterfall at Giatherin where you can step out on to the waterfall and cool down, amazing isn't it. We really enjoyed the Ayrshire scenery and felt very lucky to live here. We especially loved sitting outside to enjoy the nice weather and the beautiful countryside, the hills and fields are really what make this area what it is so we really wanted to share some of these. I really hope you enjoy looking at the photos as much as we enjoyed taking them... -- rst -- .. Indented list

The basic idea is to make a list of strings in a file and then run a difflib.SequenceMatcher to compare it to the original file. Then I like to return a list with the changes made, listing each line as a list of strings. I have a class named 'Patch' that is supposed to hold the patch string for debugging purposes. It also has a patch() method that takes in 2 lists. I am confused about passing the 2 lists in to the patch() function. Here is my code thus far, def diff(file, class1, class2, lowest): import difflib patcher = Patch(class1, class2) difflib.SequenceMatcher(None, file, class1).set_seq1(class1) difflib.SequenceMatcher(None, class1, class2).
