Several authors have suggested that the presence of plaque material in the vicinity of bifurcations poses a high risk for local thrombosis. In order to determine the presence of plaque material in the different parts of the arterial tree, we have carried out a study on the presence of atherosclerotic material in the inner surface of the common carotid bifurcation in 100 patients, who were killed by trauma. For the purpose of comparison, areas of plaque material were also examined at the origin of the carotid sinus (area of the carotid canal), the origin of the internal carotid artery (area of the common carotid artery, bifurcation and vessel wall), the origin of the internal jugular vein (area of the common carotid artery, bifurcation and vessel wall) and the origin of the external carotid artery (area of the common carotid
