Portugal heads for possible downgrade FILE – In this March 18, 2013 file photo, Portuguese bank BPN headquarters are seen at the end of a highway as the bank struggles to raise new capital. Bank of Portugal President Álvaro Santos Pereira says Portugal is preparing to lower its rating to 'junk' status, meaning it could also be forced to seek a bailout, the semi-official Jornal de Negócios news agency reported Tuesday, Jan. 10, 2013. (AP Photo/Arquivo Nacional) The Portuguese government and its main bank asked the central bank Thursday to lower the country's rating to "junk" status, meaning that it could be forced to seek a bailout. The unprecedented downgrade would come three weeks after Finance Minister Maria Luis Albuquerque warned that Portugal risked a "paradigm shift" in its economic situation and could need a rescue because its €78 billion ($97 billion) debt was unsustainable. The central bank also Wednesday downgraded the country's bonds, saying a downgrade would have little effect on the interest rates it charges. But still reeling from the negative rating and rescue loans, Portugal has been hamstrung. The government has no real say over the bank. And after the Finance Ministry reported Tuesday that the government's budget was in worse shape than expected, the Portuguese stock market was down as much as 4.5 percent Thursday before recovering. The Finance Ministry, however, said that the budget was "comfortable" for next year and that the current debt is manageable. The central bank also noted that the budget has proved to be "robust" in its surpluses. The central bank's president, Álvaro Santos-
