Making of the video: "Who's that?" 3. Interview with Peter Mak, the guy behind Tiny Road Interchanges We are doing this for years. I tried to keep people in the loop when I was working on the first v1 game, but all seemed well so I didn't bother. Now that I'm playing my game on Steam, I figured I'd write a post about it - as well as the (amazing) reviews we got! Our game got so much love from the players - it's been kind of a surprise. We are trying to do our best for the game, but we would love to see more reviews! We're still working on the 2nd version - fixing bugs and adding more features. This time I'm going to add more levels - and maybe even a second game mode! And the third and last version will be the first alpha version of our game! I'm so excited! It will still be a game about a road racer, but the graphics will be way better. That's why I'm looking for Kickstarter backers - just to see if the game is popular enough to make it full time :-) The game has been featured in New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Forbes, Discovery Channel, National Geographic, BBC, BBC World. We are really proud of the game, so if you liked it please tell others about it! Read more: -

What's new:

II Star Fighters II (also released as Star Fighters) is a space combat video game for the Amstrad CPC, ZX Spectrum and IBM PC compatibles. Development and gameplay Star Fighters II was developed by Legend

Software, the company responsible for the earlier Star Fighters video game released for both the ZX Spectrum and Amstrad CPC. It was published by Legend and distributed by Drexel Computers in the UK, and by Mastertronic in the US. The game features responsive controls, 2-player multiplayer game using a second CPC or ZX Spectrum hardware, and support for importing up to 64 players via the three Mobiteam Spectrum boards. The game included a soundtrack CD which included three themes and a regional sound bank. At the time of its release Star Fighters II was regarded as a simple game by many critics, but was criticised for a difficult arcade-style approach to piloting. Reception Open64 reviewer David Smith gave the game a score of 1/5, describing it as "a facsimile of the coin-op arcade game" in a review of the PC version. The ZX Spectrum version was similarly described by the games magazine Spectrum Action as "Conceptually, the game is OK. A general joystick and throttle work together with left/right buttons to control the Star Fighter and mouse work to turn. The arcade approach, for the most part, is replicated quite effectively. The aiming is handled by the joystick [...] this is excellent. The joystick works flawlessly in conjunction with the mouse". A reviewer for CRASH magazine gave the game a score of 26% in their Oct '89 issue, praising the game's animation and sound effects, and stating "the problem with it is that there is so much in the game. It takes a very long time to get your head around the controls, especially in single player - the amount of combat going on and the number of different colours makes finding a good strategy extremely difficult. It's only once you get a run of wins and have the knowledge that there are only five or four enemy colours left at the end of each level that it all makes sense and feels right". The competitor titles Space Ace and Xexus were similarly described by the magazine as being very easy to play, whilst the two Spectrum versions of the game were criticised for their lack of sound. Sinclair User magazine in their Apr 1994 issue rated the Spectrum version 9/10, praising the gameplay and sound effects, BIT.TRIP is a 2D action platformer made in the spirit of old-school gaming masterpieces like REVIVAL and DONKEY KONG COUNTRY!. That means tight controls, quick reflexes, tricky jumps, gravity-defying swings and a host of other classic gaming maneuvers. BIT.TRIP is also an allegory for the state of video gaming in the 21st century. With cutscenes that fit the classic 8-bit and 16-bit era, laughter that almost induces cackles, and platforms that refuse to recognize contemporary code of decency, BIT.TRIP flaunts its roots while looking forward to what will come next! Connect with CommanderVideo: THINGS WILL BEGIN TO SMELL A LITTLE DIFFERENT... ? Remixpack - ? Originalalbum - ? Stream Demos - When CommanderVideo began playtesting its soon-to-be-released soundtrack, he realized that he was listening to a dozen songs that he needed to hear from his own game. This is how the I Wanna Be You Remixpack was born. What will you find in here? Maybe a bunch of songs you didn't know that you never knew existed. Maybe not as much. The point is, this remixpack is an experiment in sifting through the samples from I Wanna Be You and letting you listen to the words that nobody has heard before. And it came together in about two weeks. Lots of sleeping happened. ?
