I used printf() several times in my code. Now I wanted to do the same using fprintf(). So what is the difference between the two? A: fprintf() writes the result of a function to a FILE* stream. printf() is much more general and can also be used to display a simple string, or any other type of data. A third alternative is the fputs() function. A: The difference is that printf can be used to format a wide range of data types, and fprintf is for formatting a single data type. From the fprintf() format string documentation: printf format-control description [...] A character of the format control is written if mask is 0x0001 or 0x0004, and a conversion character otherwise. [...] Brampton residents will see tax changes once the provincial government hikes them from three to five per cent on April 1. Records show that provincial revenue will increase about $20 million in 2019. The increase will be used to create the Canadian Child Benefit, which will provide families with roughly $1,200 per year for each child under the age of 16. The province hopes a universal child benefit will encourage more people to have children, creating a stronger economy and caring society. The province is also planning a new benefit for low-income seniors, who will see their guaranteed income rise by $124 per month.Scottish Smoke 0cc13bf012
