: the Near Misses of my Youth There's something about having a car that you want to lose. Not the car itself, of course, as it's just stuff. But there's something about the fear that there's a misplaced spark plug. Or a loose screw. A fruitless journey from home. Perhaps my foggy recollection of childhood weekends spent in the backseat of the Triumph Spitfire with my grandfather may have rubbed off on me. Now, there's something perfect about losing one's possessions. Suddenly, the full weight of the world is on your shoulders. You grip those shiny keys, the ones you might and perhaps would soon lose. The pale-yellow keys of your make-believe car. Life's important now. But it's not like I'm losing a car. I'm losing a bicycle. It's a beautiful bicycle. An English Raleigh, a 1952, with Mercian suspension. I've owned it for over twenty years, and it's returned to me in a near miss. It feels like the near miss of my youth. I can't have been the only one cycling around the town in a '57 Mercian; they were the very best in the world, to be fair. It's a bike that my grandfather raised me on. He'd say, "I thought you said there was only one Mercian…" I'd say, "There wasn't, Grandad." "Ooohhh." And we'd cycle off. The Mercian is an extraordinary machine. It's a sensible, cheap and strong bike from a country that, to my knowledge, invented neither the bicycle nor the motorbike. It's one of our most successful bikes, perhaps because it's comfortable, yet it's nimble too. It's light, a little like a bull; at 140cm, a bit like a 30kg toddler. It's good for bashing round suburban backstreets, because the front wheel is quite large and it's the simplest and most effective backpedalling mechanism; I've ridden this bike across very muddy conditions and never once had to help stop. It's forgiving of bad handling, as long as you can keep the brakes applied
