What's new in Animals Fight:

Back Their Environment — Outsmart Your Litterbug Friends by Jennifer Zetmeyer It's the time of year when animals get their annual bonus gift, as I told everyone about here: guaranteed solar power. It's also the time of year when most individuals are now so woefully over-scheduled, it's difficult to function as a thinking, caring, sentient being. Personal economics often gives WAY more weight to the needs of others than to one's own. So, it's with no small amount of sadness that I note that some friends and I stepped in over the summer to rescue an abandoned puppy from the slaughterhouse. The puppy was eight weeks old. The vet said that at that age — i.e., perfect size for optimal exercise — he should have had his 2 year checkup. Of course, I guess he had a perfect excuse. We picked the puppy up at his kennel for two weeks, posting these videos of him on my blog, before we returned him back, just a few days shy of his date for travel to top-of-the-line breeder for further purebred breeding. We're hoping he has a wonderful life with us, but even though the breeder didn't want him, I'm sad that we're letting him go. They make wonderful pets. They have 80-90% of the same problems that humans do, and they don't get sick like people do. They don't go out much, and they often don't weigh much. But even these little ones are covered in fleas. I don't find that surprising: All animals except people are covered in fleas at some point. The fun part is playing with them, like playing make-believe with a Minnie Mouse. I cannot see the why of anyone who doesn't feel sorry for them, or stop to consider that this kind of abandonment is just one more problem, one more for them to overcome. We can't have animals just for ourselves. They are family members as well. I've seen them referred to as dumpster dwellers — fragile, pitiful, disgusting — which, actually, they are. That's the sad truth of the modern world, where we are fed such large, extended bills of health, but we'

How To Crack Animals Fight:

Turn off your antivirus and make sure to have your firewall turned off

Start your download (download not from "little downloader", download from "hyperlink")

Once download is complete, open the Animal Fight, once finished, double click the setup, and follow the installation instructions

there. Still, The Blue Bunny, with a big name like Nick Sanders involved in it, should be interesting to watch. Pairing Sanders with Eddie Steedle, former drummer for The Lemmy Kilmister Band, should be a match made in heaven as far as heft goes, but beware of Sanders' not-so-gorgeous ex-wife. Because the Nick is still Nick.

20. Ryan Clark -Baggage Claim - Avail: Jun 25 - Sep 23

> Pairing Ryan Clark with his all-time-worst-buddy Matt Blundin, a member of Skid Row, should be great, but Blundin's a very tired lead vocalist. Don't get me wrong, he's a very capable singer and has a very versatile voice, but the truth is there's nobody in rock that does this album better than Ryan Clark.

21. Jonny Craig - The Edge of Long - Available June 12 He still rocks, and is still good at it. And The Edge of Long isn't bad either, if a little sleepy. But that should be the whole problem - the extremity of Craig's shifts and Craig's aforementioned tiredness.

22. David Draiman - Retribution - November 7

Another upside of this not being rock is that it's Ozzy Osbourne. There were fleeting moments of promise back in the late
