The scheduled close of the last round in the state senate race in Louisiana Friday, November 3, means a standoff over the state's next chief medical examiner. The Senate race comes as the state's coroners association is taking a stand against a bill introduced last week by Sen. Mike Flanagan, R-Holland. That bill aims to slash funding for coroners by nearly half, while only providing a fraction of the funding coroners say they need to provide level of service. Flanagan's bill has been dubbed by some as the "fetal death bill." Opponents say it would require coroners to work without the resources they need to
