Friday, March 2, 2014 12:00 At MacVisor we are often asked which file system is best for our Mac. This article will take a look at each of them and explain why one is better than the other. If you have a newer Mac Book Pro or Mac Pro with one of the first Intel Xeons (not the first and 2nd generation Extreme Edition), you'll be running the "Intel Processor Flags." If you're running older computers, you will be running the "Intel Processor Extensions" This difference will cause you to have different file systems and this can be a problem if you have to use one file system on the same machine. For example, on a single SSD/SSHD, you want to use the Apple File System or you will have data corruption. If you're like me, you'll be installing OS X on different hardware and have the same file systems. For example, I have an OS X 10.9.5 install on a Mac Pro with Xeon 8134 and I have an OS X 10.9.5 install on a MacBook Pro with an Intel Core i7. Both computers have the same file systems, though. mac file system Mac Visor is proud to be one of the Mac Users Associations (MUA) to receive the Gold Standard in Data Preservation. The Gold Standard is the highest certification given to file systems that meet Mac Users Association requirements for data preservation and accessibility. Mac OS X uses the HFS+ file system. This file system is typically seen in newer Macs. Mac OS X does not come with any sort of backup software. Most people install Time Machine to backup the operating system and data. The Mac AppStore is a distribution platform for purchasing and installing software products developed by Apple and third parties. It is part of the mobile device software development kit (SDK) Apple released in Mac OS X Leopard. Mac Visor is proud to be one of the Mac Users Associations (MUA) to receive the Gold Standard in Data Preservation. The Gold Standard is the highest certification given to file systems that meet Mac Users Association requirements for data preservation and accessibility. For this article, we are going to look at the three file systems used for the Apple File System (APFS), the New File System (NFS), and Apple File System with Journaled Encryption (APFS+J). Right now, most versions of the Mac will
