Q: Visual Studio: Making the selected line red and the rest of the lines blue I have been searching for a way to make the selected line red and the rest of the lines blue, then click a button and the lines changed blue and the selected line red again. Is this possible? I am using Visual Studio 2010. I have seen this question but it didn't seem to work. If this cannot be done, which would be the best way to have the selected line's background change color and the rest of the line's background remain the same? A: With Expression Blend you can achieve this very easily. First you select the object you want to have a different background color Then click on the gradient you want to apply and select light blue from the color palette: Apply the gradient so you get something like this: Now click on the line you want to have a selected style and you will see the selection becomes blue and the gradient effect applies:
