Please read the comments in the post and you'll see what to do. I'd rather like to know why are you doing this anyway. Q: Is there a built-in solution for checking Java version? We're using Java 8 and Tomcat 9. and as we're having some problems with the Security Manager, I'm thinking of moving to the latest version of Java. As I'm looking for a programmatic way to check if the runtime version is equal or above a certain version. I was thinking of reading java_version and comparing it to System.getProperty("java.version"). To be more clear, let's say that you're only testing on a Windows system, then if the program looks like this: public static void main(String[] args) { //I'm checking the Java version using
