Editors: Gaijin. 2f (a) Additional data acquired by the data generating means and obtained by the provider prior to delivering the directly to the recipient is not encrypted, (b) The provider encrypts the additional data with the public key; or (c)

A person with knowledge of the provider's private key is instructed to perform the encryption operation.
Â 3. B. An applicable provider may use a term in addition to the term "data". 3F (i) a "data" is any information or material formed or stored in a computer, computer system, computer program, or computer program product and for which the provider has the ability to retrieve the information or material, (ii) an "encryption" by the provider is the transformation of data from an unencrypted state to a state that is encrypted or decrypted only by an encryption key; or (iii) an "encryption" of data by a provider is a transformation of a "data" from a first form or state to a second form or state that is an encrypted state, that is, a form or state that is decrypted only by an encryption key known only to the provider. 3g (a) "Crypto-authenticated encryption" means a method of encryption that a recipient of the data can verify the encryption algorithm and may check the cryptographic authentication key of the encryption process. (b) An encryption scheme that has no cryptographic authentication is "crypto-insecure." Â 5. A provider who transmits encryption keys or an encryption process with a noncrypto-secure encryption scheme would be committing an "electronic communication fraud" if: (a) the user of the communication device is unable to verify the encryption keys or the encryption process; (b) the user of the communication device is unable to verify that the encryption keys or the encryption process had not been corrupted; or (c) the user of the communication device is unable to recover the plaintext in the event that the encrypted communication is intercepted by an adversary. 6. B. "A 'transient expiring identity token' is defined to be a token for which the lifecycle of the token is limited by the provider to a short duration, as opposed to being limited to a lifetime duration as in a 'persistent identity token'." 8. B. For the purposes of this article, an "operator" is a person, company or entity other than the person, company or entity directly 6d1f23a050
