Q: A question about double-logs There's a well-known theorem that if $f(x) = \Theta(\log^2 x)$ and $g(x) = \Theta(\log x)$ for large enough x , then $f(x) = \Theta(g(x))$. I think the proof needs only large- n analysis. So I'd like to know whether there is a result about the double-logs. Let's say $f(x) = \Theta(\log^2 x)$ and $g(x) = \Theta(\log^2 x)$ for large x . Is it true that $f(x) = \Theta(g(x))$ holds? A: I. The large- n method is a powerful technique, but it gives an asymptotic result and no estimate. Here are two examples. II. The edge cases are not always asymptotic, and it can be difficult to see what is going on. It is really better to use the Riemann-Siegel formula. A: You can prove it using the Riemann-Siegel formula if you like. It is equivalent to proving that the integral of $x \log^2 x / (\log x + k)$
