Search for the immunological mechanisms of viral clearance in chronic viral hepatitis. Study of proliferative response and production of soluble cytokines in the presence of various viral antigens and their correlation with the clinical course of the disease and the results of liver biopsy. Demonstration of the role of CD4+ helper cells and the cytokines IL-2 and IFN-gamma in viral clearance was carried out in patients with chronic hepatitis B and C in comparison with the controls. The proliferative response to the hepatitis B and C virus antigens was not decreased in chronic viral hepatitis. In viral hepatitis B, the production of soluble IL-2 in the presence of CMV and EBV antigens was significantly higher than in the controls. On the other hand, soluble IFN-gamma production by CD8+ lymphocytes in the presence of CMV antigens was increased. This was accompanied by clinical improvement in 2/3 of patients. A relation was found between the results of liver biopsy and the presence of CMV-specific soluble IFN-gamma production in the presence of CMV antigens. Similar study of the CD4+ lymphocytes resulted in demonstration of their participation in suppression of viral infections. A correlation was found between their number in the mononuclear fraction of peripheral blood and the effect of CMV-specific soluble IL-2 production by CD4+ cells in the presence of the herpesvirus antigen. Proliferative response to HBV antigen was increased in chronic hepatitis B. The results of liver biopsies showed increased number of CD8+ lymphocytes in the portal tract. More pathogenic T-cells such as CD4+ T-cells in chronic viral hepatitis could play an important role in the viral clearance. The depletion of the protective CD8+ lymphocytes and their persistence in portal tract might be one of the factors responsible for the chronicity of chronic viral hepatitis.Q: Android Studio won't open I have a samsung galaxy S3 and installed Android Studio successfully.
