In the prefilled syringe art, a hypodermic syringe comprises a barrel with a needle extending forwardly from a distal end thereof and a plunger slidably received in the barrel and adapted to effect the ejection of a predetermined quantity of a fluid from the barrel.

The quantity of the fluid ejected from the prefilled syringe is preset and is a function of both the length of the needle and the speed with which the plunger is advanced by the operator. In the prefilled syringe art, the needle must be precisely positioned relative to the opening of the plunger such that the fluid will pass through the needle and into the barrel when the plunger is advanced. In the prefilled syringe art, many needle assemblies have been developed to facilitate ejection of the fluid from the syringe. In one type of prefilled syringe assembly, a needle is provided with a forwardly extending finger as the needle is placed in the barrel and such finger is inserted into the barrel opening. The syringe plunger is then advanced to push the forwardly extending finger into the barrel. The barrel opening is sufficiently large for the finger to enter the barrel opening such that a predetermined quantity of fluid may be easily ejected from the barrel. An assembly such as that described above is described in U.S. Pat. No. 2,837,471 to H. J. Lindblad. A needle having a distal end terminating in a needle tip and a rearwardly extending finger at the distal end of the needle is inserted into the barrel. A plunger having an enlarged head at the end thereof is advanced to drive the finger into the barrel at its open end. The finger enters the barrel opening and is positioned such that the finger tip is just inside the barrel opening. Thus, when the plunger is advanced into the barrel, the finger is forced into the barrel opening and the fluid will flow through the open finger tip and into the barrel. A drawback of the assembly described above is that the finger tip can accidentally be pushed out of the barrel by the plunger when the
