Monday, August 11, 2011 Pancakes with a little extra A friend introduced me to the simple, perfect pancakes from Ellen's Eats a few weeks back, and since then I've been sprinkling on them all kinds of extras. We decided to make them with fresh blueberries. The kids really liked these and ate them all in one sitting. When I posted about it, another friend posted a recipe with raspberries and one with strawberries. The raspberries were light, and the strawberries were so heavy and jammy that they were pretty heavy, so we decided to just make one batch with blueberries. Ellen's Eats says to leave the berries out and let them settle down before flipping them over. I just use kitchen tongs. I bet that little point works just as well. They went together so quick and easy. I couldn't stop eating them; I devoured the pancakes, too! I hope you'll give this a try soon and let me know what you think. Thanks so much for introducing me to these tasty treats! When I was growing up, I used to make pancakes like this all the time. It was a favorite of my aunts and uncles... It's too bad, many of them passed away. Now, it's a job for the grandkids. I love your version of the kids' pancakes! I made a similar recipe with them too that I posted on my blog and now I'm going to try your. I've been enjoying your blog for some time now and I'll be sure to check out your new video! I've been searching for a good blueberry pancake recipe for quite some time and I am so glad to have found yours! I'm going to make them now! Also, I agree 100% with your comment about using organic or wild blueberries...they are so much better and even taste different! I have a bag full of them on my kitchen counter
