DownloadQ: When would someone use ToolStripButton instead of just using Button When would one use ToolStripButton instead of just Button, ToolStrip, etc.? I came across this kind of snippet : private void Form1_Shown(object sender, EventArgs e) { ToolStripButton tsb = new ToolStripButton("New button", ToolStripDropDownStyle.RightContext); tsb.Image = Image.FromFile(@"image.png"); ToolStrip tst = new ToolStrip(); tst.Items.Add(tsb); } It seemed in some cases to be more "sophisticated". Is this a new feature in WinForms 4.0? A: The designer doesn't need to know what kind of Control it will end up on. It can use anything. The Designer also doesn't need to know the exact control type it will end up with, so it won't try to override the default look & feel. And it doesn't need to override any default properties or raise events. It just allows you to build a Control that was designed from scratch, with all of the flexibility that you need for your application. A: The toolstrip button
