GPS Jou de cartes GPS FBL MAROC The Lower Peninsula Valley Regional Sewer Authority (LPRSA) is incorporated by Colgateville Borough, Tappan Borough, Upper Providence Township, A. D. Matching template signature and template implementation I am trying to implement a generic function template to mirror std::tuple element. It takes a class template, a class type, and a callable method. It should return either the component at a specific position in the tuple or the default-constructed value of the component at that position. I have tested it with a tuple of double values and an int as the component type. It should work for either value reference or lvalue reference parameters, but not const. When I compile the following code, I get a compilation error: (const void *) is not a literal type (meaning that a temporary object was created instead of calling the method). It works fine with double, so I think that I have the algorithm wrong. Here's the code: #include #include #include namespace detail { template T& get(const std::tuple& tuple, std::size_t index, callable F) { return F(std::get(index)); } template T& get(const std::tuple& tuple, std::size_t index, callable F) { return F(std::get(index)); } template const T& get(const std::tuple& tuple, std::size_t index, callable F) { return F(std::get(index)); } template const T& get(const std::tuple& tuple, std::size_t index, callable F) { return F(std::get(index)); } }
