alex valentine discography 3 albums torrentCovering the Syrian Chemical Weapons Using B1 Artillery Rockets and the Use of the USAF CC-130J Ghost Rider By: Jeremy Bunnell As part of the response to the potential use of chemical weapons in Syria, the U.S. Defense Department recently conducted a series of operations for the purpose of countering the Assad regime's anticipated use of chemical weapons in Syria. They were successful in three instances: On April 17, 2016, the U.S. military launched a B-1B bomber into the Mediterranean Sea off Syria, specifically aimed at gathering intelligence data about the Syrian chemical weapons stockpile. On June 27, 2016, a CC-130J support aircraft was launched from the Okinawa Air Base in Japan to collect samples of the air over Syria. On August 23, 2016, the U.S. launched an artillery rocket system used specifically for destroying chemical weapons to reduce the risk of them being used against the Syrian people. The imagery collected by the B-1B bomb, a copy of which was acquired by the GlobalSecurity.org website, shows the launch with a typical bomber launch cadence, as seen in the videos below: The data collected by the CC-130J was of particular interest since it was the same aircraft used to provide the critical information and support that allowed President Obama to make the decision to launch cruise missiles at the Syrian Air Base at Shayrat.Choose to Include P&G Trust for Your Donation When you check out on online auction site Charity Auctioneers, any bids you place during the auction will automatically go to the P&G Trust.
