Compare your discharge report to any prior discharge reports and record any changes. Why is it important? It is critical that a provider reads a chart summary for two reasons: It provides crucial information for follow-up. If you are not receiving a summary that is comprehensive, your provider will not have the information that she needs in order to provide quality care and follow-up care as required. It demonstrates that the provider read your chart and can meet the requirement of AORN's Competence Standards for Safety in Perioperative Settings. Chart Summary Chart summaries are composed of medical and surgical histories, admission and discharge summaries, test and procedures report, and any other pertinent information that affects the care of your surgical patient. The devastating consequences of autism (ASD) and anxiety on affected individuals and families challenge the field of neuroscience. An area that has received little attention in ASD research and treatment is that of emotions. Indeed, empirical evidence shows that the emotional responses of those affected by ASD vary considerably from those of the general population. Affected individuals have been shown to exhibit emotional deficits in social and non-social domains (e.g., the ability to perceive and express emotions). Further, there is evidence for anxiety and avoidance behaviors in ASD as well. Thus, in this proposed research project, we aim to understand the nature and extent of negative and positive affect in children and adolescents with ASD. While the primary goal of this R21 is to encourage the initiation of positive affective research in ASD, the data collected in the current project will also be used to establish a multi-method pipeline of affective neuroimaging data in this population. We plan to recruit 21 males and 14 females ages 8 to 16 years with ASD and 20 matched controls (8M; 12F).
