This web application uses JavaScript and WebGL to provide a native-like experience within the browser. With a wide variety of high-quality web-based applications, it's no surprise that web technology is now being used on a wide variety of platforms and devices. Today's Photoshop update includes some of the most important platform coevolution that Adobe has delivered to its customers' lives in recent years. A new Scan to Web, Save as Web Format (ScoutRAW) feature makes it possible to scan paper documents to the web with social tools they know and trust (including Facebook, Twitter, Flickr), as opposed to scanning to PDF and saving to the desktop. The result is a much simpler way to share graphical and file-based content from desktops to the web, while on the desktop, users can go back and forth between Scans. Also in today's update, Photoshop is the first industry application to increase color gamut with the introduction of color adaptive, which is the processing of an entire image to sense color differences instead of individual pixels. Color adaptive creates a more crisp, natural-looking image. Adobe Sensei incorporates new AI technologies into Photoshop and makes it easier to share the most relevant content from the cloud via services like ShopSavvy, Spellfire, and Pinterest, as well as from personal photo libraries. Over the past two years, since the public debut of a new Photoshop, the Adobe engineering team has been hard at work. The end result is the most powerful yet simplified Photoshop platform of the 21st century. New capabilities include easy, one-click edits to photos in the browser using a browser extension; and supporting improvements to the Photoshop Workshop tools in the Freehand drawing tool.
